Overview

There are some instances when a company needs to track time for workers who won't be paid through Rippling. For example:

- International contractors
- Unpaid workers (i.e., interns, volunteers)
- Companies using Rippling time tracking, but not Rippling Payroll

In this article, we'll cover the features in Rippling time tracking that you can use to help with tracking time for these unique situations.

Unassigned pay schedules

Typically, all employees in Rippling have an assigned pay schedule. This allows hours from time tracking to flow into the proper pay run for each employee.

Since some of these unique situations will result in employees not having an assigned pay schedule in Rippling, your employees can track their time in Rippling without the pay schedule requirement.

As a result of not having a pay schedule assigned, you may see the following notification when you're looking at an employee's timecard or time approval page.

Warning: These entries are not associated with a pay schedule in Rippling
As a result, they won't be paid via Rippling Payroll. You can either manually mark the entries as paid if you already have or plan to pay them outside of Rippling, or ensure that the given employee is set up in Payroll such that their hours populate in an upcoming pay run.

Mark all as paid New entry

This notification is meant to alert you that an employee doesn't have an assigned pay schedule, and as a result, their hours won't flow into Rippling Payroll.

If you use Rippling Payroll to pay these employees, this notification will serve as a reminder that you should assign them a pay schedule.

If you don't use Rippling Payroll to pay these employees, you can use the feature discussed in the next section to track what shifts you've paid employees for.

Manually marking a shift as paid

Ordinarily, approved shifts in time tracking flow into Rippling Payroll to be included in pay runs.

Since the shifts won't flow into Rippling Payroll for workers who aren't paid through there, you can utilize this feature to keep track of which shifts have been paid.

Alternatively, you can manually mark a shift as paid for an employee who is paid through Rippling Payroll to denote that you have paid them outside of the system and exclude that time entry from the relevant run.

1. From the main sidebar, select Time.
2. From the Time sidebar, select Timecards.
3. Select an employee's name to be taken to their timecard.

4. You can either Mark all as paid or click on the stacked dots next to an individual shift and select Mark time entry as paid.

Note: If you have already paid, or plan to pay, this time entry outside of Rippling, you can exclude it from the upcoming pay run by manually marking it as paid. Otherwise, if the employee is set up in Rippling Payroll, the entry will automatically be marked as paid once the relevant pay run has processed.

5. Toggle the Entry is paid and leave a comment if desired. The comment will be stored in the Change History tab of the employee's detailed timecard.
